INSTANT RELIEF

In an ideal world our ears would normally be self-cleaning. There are a number of factors that may prevent the natural migration of wax.

Wax blockage is one of the most common causes of hearing loss. Ear wax or cerumen to give it its medical term, is a naturally occurring substance formed by the cerumen glands deep within the ear canal. We shed the skin from our eardrums and our ear canals just as we do, the skin on the rest of our body. Cerumen acts as a binding agent to help the dead skin cells move the wax along the ear canal until it naturally falls out of the ear or whilst washing/showering.

OUR PROCEDURE

Our procedure begins with an otoscopic examination of the ear. If during examination it is discovered the problem isn't an ear canal blockage, then you may be offered a hearing test, referral to your GP or an ENT consultant. A small fee may be charged for the examination.

A brief hearing / ear health history and your consent to the procedure will be documented before deciding which method of removal is most appropriate for you. Further otoscopic examination takes place after the procedure to demonstrate and record the results.

An accurate assessment of your ear canal will enable us to find the best solution for your individual needs.

MICROSUCTION

Microsuction is a safe and effective process of wax removal. It was until recently only available in a hospital environment. The procedure is ideal for old and young alike whether someone has a hearing problem or not. Microsuction is particularly suitable where somebody has or had a history of perforated eardrums or previously undergone ear surgery as there is no forward pressure on the ear structures.

Hearing Sound specialise in the microsuction technique of removing ear wax blockages. With no need for weeks of softening with oil based products, clients find the procedure quick and convenient. Most manage to have their ears cleared in a single session. However there will always be situations where a second session or pre-treatment is required. This is only likely to be where wax is severely impacted. Where we determine pre-treatment is necessary, we always recommend the use of a clinically treated oil such as Earol for a couple of days. This process lubricates the walls of the ear canal and softens the wax just enough for the suction probe to form a vacuum attachment.

OUR FEES

Carried out at our clinic, our fee is £60 for 1 or both ears (no wax no fee). Home visit wax removal is £90 (£25 call out fee if no wax).

We are able to offer appointments at times to suit you, including evenings and weekends.
